Meeting purpose

This was a shorter extraordinary meeting of the Grenfell Tower Memorial Commission, marking the seventy-second meeting and was an opportunity to reflect on the work to date and to provide details of the design team selection next steps and progress towards a fitting memorial.

Opening

The Chair opened the meeting with a moment of reflection, reflecting on the commitment shown by the Commission members and the community in supporting the work to determine a lasting and fitting memorial to all those lost.

It was important to recognise all those who have provided guidance, support and practical assistance to the Commission in its journey and all those who have taken time to feed in their views to date. The next phase of work will not be without its challenges, but the community should feel both proud of what they have achieved to date and confident that the right team have been appointed.

All agreed on the importance of the community remaining at the very heart of the work going forward. This was a critical part of the Commission's approach and it must continue.

The Commission reflected that the importance of the bereaved families, survivors and immediate community having a clear path to a memorial was more important now than ever.

Secretariat update

The secretariat provided an update on the announcement of the design team to the community and set out the details of the engagement events over the coming weekend.
